I don't have anyone to talk to about this (that I'm not paying.)
I don't have anyone who's had a similar experience so conversations are always a start over and it takes hours before people even start to understand what's going on.
I also don't have anyone to help me financially.

Parents are dead and I was always the one to help out my mom with mortgage, etc after my dad died. Sister and brother married real early, had kids they couldn't afford. I was always the one working 2 jobs and helping pay their way.

My sister is the only one still alive and living nearby, but when she stopped getting financial help from me, things got nasty. Haven't talked to her in years even though she lives just a few miles away.

I have lost most of my kindness, optimism, objectivity, since the fire.
You say I chose to fight, but I had little choice. I have no where to go.
They backed me in a corner and I've tried to anticipate the next attack and forestall it.

I have learned one important thing though.
Maybe it's mostly money grubbing leaches out there in the public, BUT, there are some REALLY, incredibly good people who have/are helping me along the way through this, and

You are one of them!

I thank you sincerely!
